Neuroendocrine tumors are a rare hormone-producing tumor that affects neuroendocrine cells and are present throughout the nervous and endocrine systems. Most of the time it is very slow growing, and it is often difficult to diagnose.

Once diagnosed, patients with these tumors often have to travel hundreds or even thousands of miles to get care from specialists. The Zebra House Fund was put together to build and sustain an independently operated Zebra House to house patients with neuroendocrine tumors and their family members. All contributions will help endow not only a building fund, but to maintain the building and provide personnel and support for the future of Zebra House.
